

The CEBC website (www.cebc4cw.org) provides information and resources on over 400 programs for children, youth, and parents, such as anger management interventions, parent training, and mental health and substance abuse treatments. The CEBC reviews and summarizes the published, peer-reviewed research evidence for each intervention and uses the evidence to give the program a simple rating.

Juvenile and Family Court Judges frequently recommend or require services for children, youth, and parents involved in the child welfare system, while attorneys, advocates, and social workers may also recommend services. The CEBC website can be a helpful resource for informing decisions about services by educating judges, attorneys, and other key stakeholders on the effective programs that may be locally available to address the unique needs of court-involved families.
